-------	--	------------------	------

It happened in Kolkata. Late one evening, a taxi driver brought his taxi to a halt at its stand. As he slipped out of the driver's seat, something caught his eye. In the recess above the back seat, there was a parcel, neatly wrapped in brown paper. Taking it out, the driver discovered that it was a photo album. Someone must have forgotten it there. The album carried no name or address. But, from the first page to the last, it bore photographs of mountains and mountaineers. The driver was an intelligent man. He suddenly remembered that two men, who had hired his taxi that afternoon, were talking about nothing but mountains. With a little effort, he even recalled the house that he had picked them up from.

The album stayed with the taxi driver for that one night. Next morning, amidst warm thanks and handshakes, it was restored to its grateful owners.
